

Sample Code of Behavior

If there are behaviors exhibited by Members that are not productive or consistent with the values of the organization, a group may find it helpful to create a statement of how members will behave in certain situations.

It is important to note that if members will not hold each other accountable for their behavior, then creating this type of a tool is a worthless exercise.

- We are honest and frank in our communications.
- We respect the individual differences of people in our organization.
- We support innovation, creativity and risk taking.
- We share our failures and celebrate our successes.
- We are fair and honest in all our dealings.
- Each of us carries our share of the workload.
- We confront problems and issues openly and directly.
